Previous Question and Answer

What are sailors talking about when they say they are going to bream their ship?

- A. To bream a ship is when sailors use a blow torch to rid the hull of barnacles and seaweed.
- B. In the days of wooden ships sailors used to haul them out of the water and put a fire under the hull so as to heat up the tar till it would run thus making it easier to scrape away the barnacles and seaweed on the hull.
